PRESS RELEASE

Leading Friendly Low Fare airline announces further expansion from Cyprus.

Leading Low Fare Airline, Jet2.com has just announced a new promising route from Pafos to the Scottish city of Glasgow, bringing the number of routes from Cyprus to the UK to seven. This follows the recent announcement of new flights between Larnaka and Pafos to Manchester.

The new route to Glasgow will begin on 3rd of April 2011 and will operate twice a week on Wednesdays and Sundays, with fares starting at just 85.99€. This new route comes as Jet2.com announces a new UK base at Glasgow Airport.

The new route, on sale now, will not only give the travelling public in Glasgow and West of Scotland more value and choice, to fly directly to the popular Cypriot destination of Pafos, but will also be fantastic for people living in the region to get back to the UK for a short break or to visit friends or family.

Jet2.com Managing Director, Ian Doubtfire said "We are thrilled to be launching at Glasgow airport and feel that both the Pafos and Glasgow areas will benefit considerably from our friendly low fare service. It has been a turbulent time for the travel industry with some airlines and operators ceasing to trade this year. In contrast we have continued to go from strength to strength with new bases and significant growth from Cyprus. We can offer people in the area a great choice of UK destinations, leading low fares, a generous 22kg baggage allowance, a loyalty scheme – myJet2, allocated seating and convenient flight times. All this coupled with our outstanding customer service shows we are never afraid to go above and beyond for our passengers".

Alfred van der Meer, Chief Executive Officer of Hermes Airports Ltd, welcomed the decision of Jet2.com to expand its routes from Pafos airport. "This development creates new opportunities and choices which I am confident that both, the travelling public and the tourism industry will embrace. The launch of the new route by Jet2.com demonstrates the interest sparked by the Hermes Airports' Incentive Scheme and signifies the prospects available to open new markets".
