

3 September 2010

PRESS RELEASE

EasyJet spreads its wings with a new route from Pafos to Edinburgh

Low-fares airline easyJet has just announced it will launch another brand new route from Pafos to Edinburgh later this year. Flights to Edinburgh, available from November 3 (running twice weekly, Wednesdays and Saturdays), with fares starting at £31.99 (one-way).

Sophie Dekkers, UK commercial manager of easyJet, said: “We are delighted to offer an even wider range of destinations to the people of Cyprus with the introduction of the Edinburgh route. This will also be a great boost for tourism in Cyprus during the winter months, as easyJet commits to year-round flying.”

In his statement, Hermes Airports CEO, Alfred van der Meer welcomed the announcement by Easy jet and highlighted that “the new route to and from Edinburgh will commence in the winter period, a fact which demonstrates the year round growth of Cyprus’ airports network. Easyjet connects Cyprus and UK with another five routes employing both, Pafos and Larnaka airports. The new route for Edinburgh is the result of the successful utilization of Hermes Airports’ incentive scheme and it’s expected to be a substantial contribution for further developing tourist traffic to Cyprus and especially to Pafos”.

EasyJet now flies to London Gatwick, London Luton, Bristol and Manchester from Pafos and from Larnaka to London Gatwick. All flights are available to book online at easyJet.com

